Building Resiliency in Children

ACROSS all demographics children are facing a mental health crisis.

With levels of anxiety, depression and self-injury growing nationwide and locally, organizations that service children need to be better equipped to meet the demands that are presenting themselves on an ever changing basis.

Studies have shown that consistent positive intervention at pre-adolescence can affect a child's ability to become more resilient or able to overcome significant hardship in later life and affect their overall mental health and well-being.

Through the formation of responsive face-to-face relationships and mentorships in early life, in concert with programs that promote a child's ability to play and develop, children can build resiliency that can set them in a positive trajectory.

"We provide a positive place for all youth, especially those who need us most, and quality programs to help them become healthy, responsive, confident and productive members of the community."

"By providing youth with a nurturing environment, life skills training, positive peer support, and caring role models, the Clubs help youth develop a sense of responsibility for their lives. Such support can help an at-risk teenager develop better decision-making skills that can help them avoid risky behaviors."
